“While we all come from different countries we are one human race. Every child matters.”

Cassandra Treadwell, CEO and Co-founder So They Can
Who We Are

So They Can is an international non-profit organisation focused on empowering children and their communities through education in some of the neediest and most marginalised communities in East Africa. We work in Kenya and Tanzania to deliver a better quality of education through supported learning to deliver the basic human right of education. Because every child matters.

Our Mission

So They Can’s mission is to transform the lives of children and their families living in poverty by providing access to quality education.

Our Values

Above all we value:

IMPACT - Challenging ourselves to make a real difference to the lives of others
INTEGRITY - Delivering what we promise and being upfront
PERSISTENCE - The dogged determination to break new ground
RESPONSIBILITY - Honouring our commitment to all of those who support us; and the African philosophy of UBUNTU - The rewards of human connection

Our Vision

So They Can’s vision is to see all children in East Africa receiving a quality education to enable them to break the poverty cycle, become self-sufficient and realise their potential.
At the very core of So They Can is the belief that there is a deep connection between all human beings and that all children, wherever they are born, should be given an equal chance in life to reach their potential. So They Can works passionately and relentlessly to provide some of the poorest children in Africa with the opportunity to get an education. We do this because we believe that restricted access to education is one of the surest ways of transmitting poverty from generation to generation.

The fact that education is a human right is recognised in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child.

While there has been good progress, millions of children around the World are still denied their right to quality education.

So They Can’s work is making a massive difference to very poor children in the communities in which we operate in East Africa. In 2017, all of our 120 Form 8 primary school students at Aberdare Ranges Primary School gained the necessary marks to transition to high school and continue their educational journey through us. In Mamire ward, in the Babati district in Tanzania, we have also now graduated 101 teachers at our Teacher’s College that will support the improvements in teaching in government schools in that country.

Global Partnership for Education, run by Alice Albright, believes, as we do, that education in Africa reduces poverty, boosts economic growth and increases income. It increases a person’s chances of having a healthy life, reduces maternal deaths, and combats diseases such as HIV and AIDS. Education can promote gender equality, reduce child marriage and promote peace.

So They Can understands that it is not enough to get children in school. The quality of education delivered has to be high and has to begin at preschool age. This is why So They Can invest in pre school education, resources schools and invests in teacher training through our educational collaboratives in Kenya and Tanzania. In Tanzania in 2017, we supported 26 government schools and our Mamire Teacher’s College graduated 22 new teachers.

So They Can is making a massive difference in very poor communities in East Africa and each year our reach and impact continues to grow. I want to thank everyone who makes the work of So They Can possible: our employees and contractors, who give of themselves everyday, our donors who give so generously, our stakeholders from Government and the private sector in East Africa who believe in our work and all those people in Australia and New Zealand who sponsor our children simply because they care.

With your support we can continue to do even more in the future.

With heartfelt thanks to all of you.

So They Can
Albert Einstein said: “There are only two ways to live your life. One is as though nothing is a miracle. The other is as though everything is a miracle.”

So They Can choose the latter outlook on life. Every moment counts, is to be well spent and gratefully appreciated. 2017 for So They Can illustrated this with so many highlights, including 100% (significantly exceeding our goal of 80%) of our Aberdare Ranges Primary School students getting the required Kenyan Certificate of Primary Education examination results to get them a place in secondary school. We had many international visitors coming to our projects and, after seeing our impact, joining our So They Can family. Three of our Kenyan family came to Australia to meet our supporters here. We signed a new Memorandum of Understanding with our Tanzanian stakeholders at the national level. So They Can became a member of TANFIDE, an international Consortium whose mission is to raise the quality of education in Tanzania.

With your support, in 2017, we raised over $AUD 2,400,000 and saw 862 of our 1080 Aberdare Ranges Primary and high school students connect to a sponsor family.

In January the number of our Tanzanian Education Collaborative schools increased from 9 to 26, expanding our reach from 4,318 children positively impacted in 2016 to 5,400 children and 250 primary teachers. In September, we graduated a further 22 teachers from our Mamire Teacher's College, bringing the total teachers we have graduated since we began 5 years ago to 101 with a further 126 graduating in 2018.

In Kenya, with the enrolment of 120 new children at Aberdare Ranges Primary School into pre-primary in January, the school is now running at its full capacity of 1,080 students. At our Miti Mingi Children’s Village we are so pleased with the successful transition of our operations from institutional care to a family based care model with only 8 boys and girls cared for as a family in family houses with a permanent house mother. This transition into the family based care model is having significant positive impact on the children. We have observed an increased sense of belonging and security, improved trust and openness between the children and their mothers, improved academic performance and positive behaviour, improved health, more effective care and parenting and better community integration.

Albert Einstein also said:

“Imagination is more important than knowledge. Knowledge is limited. Imagination encircles the world.”

We have no shortage of imagination at So They Can, with our main dream being the sacredness of our one humanity being acknowledged and protected. While we all come from different countries we are one human race. Every child matters. Thank you all so much for your understanding, compassion and essential support.

Our history

So They Can was founded by Cassandra Treadwell and Keri Chittenden in 2009, in response to the 2007 Kenyan election violence which saw more than 600,000 people internally displaced within Kenya. The loss of lives, homes, employment and hope was immense. In response to this situation and with lengthy consultation with communities and government, So They Can was formed to initially provide support to an internally displaced persons camp of 6,700 people who were living in temporary tents. Their request: please help us educate our children to give them a future.

The request from the community came because the existing schools lacked the capacity to educate the children. Class sizes were between 60 to 200 children per teacher and one text book would be shared between up to 5 students. A new school model was needed.

The community took Cass and Keri to a 5-acre block of land, informing them that the Teachers’ Co Operative owned the land and that it was designated for a public school. They asked them to speak with the Government and to build that school and to educate their children. Negotiations began, resulting in a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) between the Kenyan Government and So They Can outlining the government’s commitment to fund teachers, water, electricity and roads and So They Can’s commitment to construct the school and form part of the Board of Management overseeing its management. In 2010 the doors to Aberdare Ranges Primary School opened with the life-changing home for vulnerable and orphaned children, Miti Mingi Children’s Village, opening in 2012.

In 2011 So They Can was introduced to the critical education needs in rural Tanzania on a visit with So They Can Chairman, Peter Hunt.

In 2012 a partnership with the Tanzanian government and local stakeholders was initiated with the objective to improve the quality of education throughout the rural Babati District. So They Can founded the Mamire Teacher’s College, committing to training quality teachers and improving the quality of teachers being deployed to local schools. This approach has the key objective of improving the learning and teaching environment in the rural schools that form part of So They Can’s Education Collaborative.

So They Can has continued its expansion in both Kenya and Tanzania, implementing education projects and social businesses that enable learning in the communities they work with.

Nine years on and many lives have been positively transformed through the work of So They Can in East Africa through the power of education.

In Tanzania

At the core of So The Can’s Education Collaborative is the Mamire Teachers’ College, the only public private college in Tanzania.

According to the UNESCO Institute for Statistics, Sub-Saharan Africa will account for two-thirds - or 6.2 million - of the new teachers needed globally by 2030. As the school-age population expands, this growing demand is exacerbated; for every 100 primary school students in 2012, there will be 147 children in 2030. Countries in the region will have to fill almost 4 million existing teaching positions by 2030, as well as create and fill 2.2 million new ones.

Our College speaks directly to this need, addressing the alarming teacher deficit. Our goal is to qualify excellent teachers and enhance the 26 local government schools we work with to create excellent learning environments in the Babati District of Tanzania.

In Kenya

2017 saw a major milestone achieved! Historically, on a national level, only 51%* of students gain the pass mark required in year 8 to continue onto secondary school, our year 9 equivalent.

For our first graduating class of 120 students from Aberdare Ranges Primary School, our goal was to empower 80% to continue on their critical education journey to secondary school in 2018. This goal was exceeded with all of our inaugural graduating class of 120 students able to transition to secondary school in 2018. These students will attend 30 different schools across Kenya based on their pass mark. So They Can, powered by our sponsors, is committed to supporting them throughout their education journey so they can break the poverty cycle and become self-sufficient.

December

» Ahead of their trip to the Tanzania projects University of Notre Dame Australia announce that they have raised over $50,000! Education students experience life as part of our College community working with teachers in our core schools to share skills and learnings.

» Results are in! A milestone achievement with 100% of the inaugural year 8 class from Aberdare Ranges Primary School able to transition to secondary school to continue their education journey so they can break the poverty cycle and become self-sufficient.

Finishing a year of 'firsts' with this milestone achievement illustrates that So They Can’s work, made possible by all our supporters, sponsors, government partners, stakeholders and global team is achieving life-changing results.
Looking forward

In 2015, the United Nations released its new global development priorities in the form of 17 Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) to be achieved by 2030. Education continues to be a part of these goals, with goal number 4, to ensure inclusive and equitable quality education and promote lifelong learning opportunities for all.

Inline with these critical United Nations goals, by 2030 So They Can is committed to changing the future for in excess of 100,000 children in Africa who, through no fault of their own, have become victims of extreme poverty.

So They Can will achieve this by enabling children to receive a quality education that will give them more opportunities to break out of the poverty cycle that unjustly limits their potential.

2018 will see us moving away from capital intensive infrastructure and expanding our Education Collaborative. This will allow us to utilise our learnings, funds and capacity to support and work with a larger number of government schools in need (35 schools), creating the opportunity for greater impact.

These schools will benefit from a range of programs based on need, including the following:

» Training and development of teachers:
  » Qualifying new teachers
  » Up-skilling existing teachers

» Facilitation of feeding programs

» Access to clean water

» Training for School Management Committees, Boards of Management and Parent Teacher Associations

» Sanitation programs

» Introductions of mobile libraries

» Supply of resources such as text books and materials

» Community engagement and sensitization

» Boarding school resources

» Classroom repairs and critical upgrades

By 2030 So They Can also aims to empower thousands of teacher graduates to give back to their communities, with families supported and thriving, and local people helping each other, through education.

By continuing to work hand in hand with local government and our communities in Kenya and Tanzania, So They Can will strive to achieve these life-changing targets by focusing on:

» Creating and supporting quality teachers and investing in school development through education programs and mentors.

» Continue to support and forge strong partnerships with national and local governments and local and international Not For Profits to further enable education.

» Achieve centres of excellence in child welfare and education at our core projects:
  » Miti Mingi Village
  » Mamire Teachers College, and
  » Aberdare Ranges Primary School

» Ensure financial sustainability of our projects through our sponsorship programs to enable us to expand to other communities in great financial need.

It is the determination and commitment by So They Can and its supporters that will bridge the gap between the developed world and the developing communities in East Africa, enriching many lives around the globe through education. Thank you.

“Every morning I wake up, it beholds me as the team leader in Kenya to inspire my staff to work hard and take advantage of your love and support to positively impact the lives of our people. We are optimistic and beyond any contrary conviction that we shall succeed.”
